Presence of Other Learners

Graduate Medical Education Committee — Policies and Procedures

The presence of other learners in the program can benefit resident education by providing opportunities for interprofessional teamwork skill development and increasing appreciation for other health professionals.

There is also the potential that the presence of other learners can dilute the resources available for resident training, thus negatively impacting the learning environment. Programs must update the GME Office as to the presence of other learners. There is a Notification of the Presence of Other Learners Form available for programs to use under policies. The potential impact of other learners will be monitored by the ACGME Resident Survey and Focus Groups.
